

40% or more of a plant's work orders are issued because of system leaks.

It's a fact of life that holds true in company after company across North America. And it goes right to the bottom line.

Of course, some companies do better than others.

They use the expertise of their independent sealing distributor to find systematic, yet simple, ways to increase the reliability of their fluid handling systems. It might be through the use of alternate materials. It might be through standardizing repair procedures. You just can't know until you turn real fluid sealing experts loose on the problem – experts like us.
